COURSE OBJECTIVES: Many of the graduates from the Tropical Conservation and Development program work outside of traditional academia in non-profit organizations, research institutes, or consulting. Even those in academia are confronted with raising funds for programs that fall outside of the standard research grant proposal model. Traditional graduate student courses in conservation and development do not address the practical and critical skill of developing and funding programs. The objectives of this course are: (1) To introduce students to the diverse set of private and public sources for funding their activities, (2) To develop the skills needed to fundraise from these sources, including the development of donor profiles, constructing fundraising plans, applying fundraising strategies and tactics, and (3) To understanding ethical and legal issues surrounding fundraising.

Students will learn by doing! All students will develop and implement a fund-raising project focused on their work and work in groups to develop a fundraising plan for an organization. After completing the course, students will be able to:

- (1) Design and implement a crowd-funding project
- (2) Develop targeted fundraising plans for corporate donors, foundations, etc.
- (3) Develop targeted fundraising plan
- (4) Create donor/funding organization lists and profiles
- (5) Understand and plan direct mail, annual, and capital campaigns
- (6) Prepare a letter of inquiry or concept paper
- (7) Plan fundraising event

COURSE MATERIALS: Readings on course web page. There are no required textbooks.

It is assumed that you will complete all work independently in each course unless the instructor provides explicit permission for you to collaborate on course tasks (e.g. assignments, papers, quizzes, exams). Furthermore, as part of your obligation to uphold the Honor Code, you should report any condition that facilitates academic misconduct to appropriate personnel. It is your individual responsibility to know and comply with all university policies and procedures regarding academic integrity and the Student Honor Code.
